We were moving along driving the enemy when at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon we ran up against the enemy in force and struck a snag. In less than half an hour I had a horse shot from under me, the colors shot away and was wounded in the side by a piece of shell. I was given a mule which I rode the rest of the day. Our entire brigade was driven back to Pleasant Hill where we were reinforced and took up the fight again cleaning up on the enemy. I passed through the second battle of Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Shantilla and Fredericksburg, but the hottest fight of them all was that at Sabine Crossroads."
